Regulating Gas Fixtures No 'Do-It-Yourself' Job

Regulating, adjusting, or tampering with gas-burning equipment for either cooking or heating is certainly not a "do-it-yourself" job, according to Dr. Roy D. Gilbert, Los Angeles County Health Officer whose department is called upon to investigate carbon-monoxide poisonings.

This month in the eastern section of the County, the Health Department, in tracking down carbon-monoxide poisonings, found that members of two families were hospitalized because the panels on their forced air equipment were not fastened in place and the fans in these units were therefore encasing the products of combustion throughout the house rather than expelling them through the return to the return air.

DR. GILBERT said that the adjustment of gas-burning equipment is a job for experts in the plumbing and heating business or the gas companies.

He urged that all unvented heaters be replaced with approved heaters connected to vents leading to outside air.

In cases where unvented heaters are still being used, he urged householders to observe four precautions:

1. Never sleep in a room with an unvented heater burning.
2. When such heaters are burning, be sure that a window is open at least enough to provide ventilation with outside air.
3. Be sure that heaters are attached to gas lines with metal piping.
4. Have all heaters vented or unvented checked by heating experts, or gas periodically by plumbers.
